7 MARIO ESCOBEDO-GONZALEZ,

Case No. 2:15-CV-1687 JCM (PAL)

8 Plaintiff(s),

ORDER

9 v.

10 JOHN KERRY, et al.,

11 Defendant(s).
12

13 Presently before the court is plaintiff Mario Escobedo-Gonzalez's motion for summary 14 judgment. (ECF No. 18). Defendant Secretary of the Department of State John Kerry (the 15 "government") filed a response (ECF No. 22), to which Escobedo replied (ECF No. 25).

16 I. Facts

17 This case is about the Department of State's ("DOS") denying Escobedo a passport on the 18 grounds that he did not provide the requested evidence to show that he is a U.S. citizen. On January 19 23, 1987, the United States Department of Justice, through the Immigration and Nationalization 20 Service ("INS"), began removal proceedings against Escobedo. (ECF No. 13). The INS argued 21 that Escobedo was born in Mexico and not in Cameron County, Texas, as reported in his birth 22 certificate. (ECF No. 13). The INS received evidence that the nurse who signed Escobedo's birth 23 certificate was not actually present during his birth. (ECF No. 18-3). The immigration judge ruled 24 in favor of Escobedo finding that INS failed to satisfy its burden to prove, by clear and convincing 25 evidence, that he was a deportable foreign national.<sup>1</sup> (ECF No. 18-3).
26
27

28 <sup>1</sup> The immigration judge also found, in dicta, that Escobedo had proven that he was a citizen. The immigration judge stated:

1 After this ruling, Escobedo applied for a passport with the DOS. (ECF No. 13). The DOS 2 approved Escobedo's application and issued him a passport on July 21, 1995. (ECF No. 18-4).
3 Escobedo applied to renew his passport on March 28, 2005, and the DOS issued his renewal on 4 April 13, 2005. (ECF No. 18-4).

5 On April 7, 2015, Escobedo applied for his second passport renewal. (ECF No. 18-4). On 6 May 7, 2015, the DOS requested Escobedo's certified birth certificate to prove his citizenship 7 because the evidence had surfaced that the midwife who signed Escobedo's birth certificate was 8 not present at his birth. (ECF No. 18). Escobedo, through his counsel, responded with a letter and 9 attached the immigration judge's opinion which had resolved the issues that the DOS was 10 concerned with during a removal proceeding. (ECF No. 18-5). The DOS responded with an 11 additional letter again requesting Escobedo's birth certificate, or other documentation to prove that 12 Escobedo was born in the United States, to which Escobedo did not respond. (ECF No. 18-5). Two 13 months later, the DOS denied Escobedo's renewal request because Escobedo did not provide his 14 birth certificate, and because the DOS did not believe that Escobedo had proven his citizenship by 15 a preponderance of the evidence. (ECF No. 18-5).

16 Escobedo filed the underlying complaint alleging that the DOS's actions in denying his 17 passport renewal violates 8 U.S.C. § 1503 and asks the court to declare under 28 U.S.C § 2201 18 that Escobedo is a U.S. citizen. (ECF No. 13).

19 In the instant motion, Escobedo moves for summary judgement on that claim. (ECF No.
20 18).

21 II. Legal Standard

22 The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow summary judgment when the pleadings, 23 depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, 24 show that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to a

26 I have no doubt, whatsoever, as to the respondent's birth in the United 27 States. It is not the burden of the respondent to prove that he was born in the United 28 States, but he has done so in this case by clear, convincing, and completely unequivocal evidence. I conclude, therefore, that since the evidence in this case establishes, without a doubt, that the respondent was born in Brownsville, Texas, in the United States, that he is a citizen of the United States by birth, and that these proceedings must and should be terminated. (ECF No. 18-3 at 14).

1 judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). A principal purpose of summary judgment is 2 “to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 3 323–24 (1986).

4 For purposes of summary judgment, disputed factual issues should be construed in favor 5 of the non-moving party. Lujan v. Nat’l Wildlife Fed., 497 U.S. 871, 888 (1990). However, to be 6 entitled to a denial of summary judgment, the nonmoving party must “set forth specific facts 7 showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Id.

8 In determining summary judgment, a court applies a burden-shifting analysis. The moving 9 party must first satisfy its initial burden. “When the party moving for summary judgment would 10 bear the burden of proof at trial, it must come forward with evidence which would entitle it to a 11 directed verdict if the evidence went uncontroverted at trial. In such a case, the moving party has 12 the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of fact on each issue material to 13 its case.” C.A.R. Transp. Brokerage Co. v. Darden Rests., Inc., 213 F.3d 474, 480 (9th Cir. 2000) 14 (citations omitted).

15 By contrast, when the nonmoving party bears the burden of proving the claim or defense, 16 the moving party can meet its burden in two ways: (1) by presenting evidence to negate an essential 17 element of the non-moving party’s case; or (2) by demonstrating that the non-moving party failed 18 to make a showing sufficient to establish an element essential to that party’s case on which that 19 party will bear the burden of proof at trial. See Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 323–24. If the moving 20 party fails to meet its initial burden, summary judgment must be denied and the court need not 21 consider the nonmoving party’s evidence. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 159– 22 60 (1970).

23 If the moving party satisfies its initial burden, the burden then shifts to the opposing party 24 to establish that a genuine issue of material fact exists. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith 25 Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986). To establish the existence of a factual dispute, the 26 opposing party need not establish a material issue of fact conclusively in its favor. It is sufficient 27 that “the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties’ differing 28

1 versions of the truth at trial.” T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass’n, 809 F.2d 626, 2 631 (9th Cir. 1987).

3 In other words, the nonmoving party cannot avoid summary judgment by relying solely on 4 conclusory allegations that are unsupported by factual data. See Taylor v. List, 880 F.2d 1040, 5 1045 (9th Cir. 1989). Instead, the opposition must go beyond the assertions and allegations of the 6 pleadings and set forth specific facts by producing competent evidence that shows a genuine issue 7 for trial. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324.

8 At summary judgment, a court’s function is not to weigh the evidence and determine the 9 truth, but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 10 Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249 (1986). The evidence of the nonmovant is “to be believed, and all 11 justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor.” Id. at 255. But if the evidence of the 12 nonmoving party is merely colorable or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be 13 granted. See id. at 249–50.

14 III. Discussion

15 A. Genuine issues exist precluding summary judgment in favor of Escobedo on his 16 8 U.S.C. § 1503 claim.

17 A plaintiff can bring a claim under 8 U.S.C. § 1503 if he “is within the United States claims 18 a right or privilege as a national of the United States and is denied such right or privilege by any 19 department or independent agency.” 8 U.S.C. § 1503(a). Once a plaintiff is denied a right or 20 privilege that he is entitled to, he may then sue for a judgment by the court “declaring him to be a 21 national of the United States.” Id.

22 To succeed on a § 1503 claim, a plaintiff must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, 23 that he is a citizen of the United States. Yu Tung Gay v. Rusk, 290 F.2d 630, 631 (9th Cir. 1961).
24 Further, a plaintiff can solely use evidence that is undisputed to establish his citizenship by a 25 preponderance of the evidence for the purposes of summary judgement. See Lujan, 497 U.S. at 26 888.

27 Further, the court reviews a § 1503 claim de novo. Richards v. Secretary of State, 752 F.2d 28 1413, 1417 (9th Cir. 1985). Thus, the court need not give traditional deference to the administrative agencies regarding a plaintiff’s citizenship status under 8 U.S.C. § 1503. See id.

1 Here, the court cannot grant summary judgment because there is a genuine issue of material 2 fact—namely, where Escobedo was born.

3 Escobedo argues that the DOS wrongfully denied his application to renew his passport 4 because he is a U.S. citizen and because the immigration judge found the same. Escobedo thus 5 requests that the court declare him a U.S. citizen pursuant to § 1503. Escobedo has provided 6 several pieces of evidence in support of his claim. First, Escobedo provides a photocopy of his 7 birth certificate, which shows that he was born in Cameroon County, Texas. (ECF No. 18-1).
8 Second, Escobedo provides a photocopy of his handwritten birth certificate that was signed by the 9 midwife who allegedly attended his birth. (ECF No. 18-1). Third, Escobedo provides an 10 immigration judge's decision from his removal proceedings, in which the immigration judge stated, 11 in dicta, that he is a citizen. (ECF No. 18-1).

12 In response, the DOS argues that Escobedo's birth certificate is fake and that he was born 13 in Mexico. In support, the DOS includes a copy of Escobedo's birth certificate from Mexico (ECF 14 No. 22-1) and a copy of a notice from the Texas bureau of vital statistics that states that the midwife 15 who signed Escobedo's birth certificate, testified under oath that she did not actually attend 16 Escobedo's birth. (ECF No. 22-2).

17 Under 22 C.F.R. § 51.42–.43 a citizen can prove his citizenship in one of two ways. First, 18 if he was born in the U.S., the citizen can prove his citizenship by providing a birth certificate or 19 secondary evidence of his birth in the U.S. (such as baptismal certificates, hospital records, school 20 records, etc.). 22 C.F.R. § 51.42. Second, if the citizen was born outside of the U.S., then he must 21 provide documentation of his naturalization. 22 C.F.R. § 51.42. Here, Escobedo provided a birth 22 certificate, which is usually enough to prove his birthright citizenship by a preponderance of the 23 evidence.

24 While Escobedo has provided sufficient evidence to show, by a preponderance of the 25 evidence, that he is a U.S. citizen, the government has raised a genuine issue for trial by providing 26 evidence that calls into question the legitimacy of Escobedo's U.S. birth certificate. Thus, a 27 genuine issue exists precluding summary judgment in Escobedo's favor.

1           B. The immigration judge’s prior decision regarding Escobedo’s citizenship does 2           not bar this court from adjudicating this issue under the doctrine of collateral 3           estoppel.

4           Escobedo further argues that the immigration judge has already decided the instant issue 5           and declared him a U.S. citizen. Escobedo thus maintains that collateral estoppel applies and the 6           court is precluded from relitigating the issue of his citizenship and must declare him a citizen.
7           (ECF No. 18)

8           In response, the government contends that this court is not barred from relitigating this 9           issue because the elements of collateral estoppel are not met. (ECF No. 22). Further, the 10          government argues that collateral estoppel does not apply to agency decisions unless the statute 11          specifically mentions the doctrine. (ECF No. 22).

12          The Supreme Court has held that the doctrine of collateral estoppel generally applies to 13          agency decisions. See, e.g., B & B Hardware, Inc. v. Hargas Indus., Inc., 135 S. Ct 1293, 1303 14          (2015). Supreme Court precedent “makes clear that issue preclusion is not limited to those 15          situations in which the same issue is before two courts. Rather, where a single issue is before a 16          court and an administrative agency, preclusion also often applies.” Id.

17          Further, the Ninth Circuit upheld this reasoning with regard to the Immigration and 18          Nationality Act (INA) and has held that removal proceedings are subject to collateral estoppel.
19          See, e.g., Belayneh v. I.N.S., 213 F.3d 488, 491 (9th Cir. 2000); Ramon-Sepulveda v. I.N.S., 824 20          F.2d 749, 750 (9th Cir. 1985).

21          Under the INA, the attorney general is charged with making the legal determination as to 22          who is and is not a citizen in the context of removal proceedings. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5) (the 23          attorney general can commence removal proceeding to which the party who is subject to removal 24          can raise a defense that he is a citizen, if the immigration judge rejects this defense, then the party 25          can appeal to the federal courts); see also Negusie v. Holder, 555 U.S. 511, 516–17 (2009) (finding 26          that “Congress has charged the Attorney General with administering the INA, and a ‘ruling by the 27          Attorney General with respect to all questions of law shall be controlling’”) (citation omitted). The 28          attorney general has the ability to delegate that authority to immigration judges, who act as agents

1 to the attorney general, in making these citizenship determinations during removal proceedings.
2 See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.10.

3       However, the extent of the attorney general’s power under the INA in the context of 4 removal proceedings is to determine whether the government has enough evidence to deport the 5 party in question. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252. While a party can raise a defense of citizenship in the 6 context of a deportation proceeding, if this defense is successful it halts the proceeding, and the 7 district or appellate court is left to make a citizenship determination. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(5)(C) 8 (“The petitioner may have such nationality claim decided only as provided in this paragraph”); see 9 also Chau v. I.N.S., 247 F.3d 1026, 1027–28 (9th Cir. 2001). If the party utilizes a citizenship 10 defense, and the immigration judge rules against him, then the party can appeal to the district court 11 after exhausting his administrative remedies, but “if the immigration judge accepts the citizenship 12 defense, [the immigration judge] terminates the removal proceedings without deciding 13 citizenship.” Rios-Valenzuela v. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 506 F.3d 393, 396–97 (5th Cir. 2007) 14 (emphasis added) (citing Chau, 247 F.3d at 1027–28). Thus, a successful citizenship defense just 15 halts the immigration proceeding and does not determine citizenship for the party in question.

16       If a party wishes to affirmatively prove his citizenship through the attorney general, he 17 must do so by filing an application for citizenship under 8 U.S.C. § 1452(a). Under this procedure, 18 the attorney general will issue a certificate of citizenship if he is satisfied with the proof presented.
19 See 8 U.S.C. § 1452(a). If the party’s application for citizenship is denied, and the party exhausted 20 his administrative remedies, then the party can sue for a declaration of citizenship under 8 U.S.C.
21 § 1503(a). Therefore, the sole administrative method of affirmatively proving one’s citizenship is 22 under 8 U.S.C. § 1452(a).

23       Thus, collateral estoppel does not apply to 8 U.S.C. § 1503(a) claims when the 24 administrative agency evaluated a party’s citizenship defense during a removal proceeding, as 25 here, because the elements of collateral estoppel are not met. Collateral estoppel has three 26 elements: (1) the issues that would be litigated are “sufficiently similar” and “sufficiently material” 27 to what was litigated previously; (2) a determination as to whether the issue was actually litigated 28

1 in the other adjudicatory body; and (3) a determination as to whether the issue was actually decided 2 by the other adjudicatory body. United States. v. Castillo-Basa, 483 F.3d 890, 897 (9th Cir. 2007).

3 Here, none of these elements are met, and collateral estoppel therefore does not apply.
4 First, during Escobedo's removal proceeding, the immigration judge was evaluating whether the 5 government had enough evidence to prove that Escobedo was a foreign national by clear, 6 convincing, and unequivocal evidence. (ECF No. 18-3). During an administrative proceeding 7 under 8 U.S.C. § 1452(a), the party has the burden of proving that he is a U.S. citizen to the attorney 8 general's satisfaction. During this proceeding, Escobedo has the burden of proving that he is a U.S.
9 citizen by a preponderance of the evidence. These shifting burdens and standards of proof show 10 that the issue is not significantly similar to what was litigated previously. See Peterson v. Clark 11 Leasing Corp., 451 F.2d 1291, 1292 (9th Cir. 1971) (finding that "issues are not identical if the 12 second action involves application of a different legal standard, even though the factual setting of 13 both suits be the same").

14 Second, the issue of Escobedo's citizenship was not actually litigated before the 15 immigration judge. The issue that was litigated before the immigration judge was whether the 16 government provided enough evidence to justify Escobedo's deportation. (ECF No. 18-3). While 17 the immigration judge considered Escobedo's citizenship as a defense to the government's claim, 18 Escobedo was not required to prove his citizenship by any legal standard. Therefore, Escobedo's 19 citizenship was not fully litigated.

20 Third, while the immigration judge, in dicta, decided that Escobedo had proven his 21 citizenship by clear, convincing, and completely unequivocal evidence, (ECF No. 18-3), it was not 22 in the immigration judge's power during a removal proceeding to decide Escobedo's citizenship.
23 As mentioned above, only courts can decided citizenship claims on appeal from deportation 24 proceedings. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(5). If Escobedo wanted to prove his citizenship through the 25 attorney general, he should have filled an application for citizenship under 8 U.S.C. § 1452(a).
26 Thus, the immigration judge solely decided whether the government could provide enough 27 evidence to remove Escobedo and not whether Escobedo proved he was a citizen.

Therefore, since collateral estoppel does not bar the court from adjudicating Escobedo's 8 U.S.C. § 1503(a) claim, and since there are genuine issues of material fact surrounding Escobedo's birthplace, the court will deny Escobedo's motion for summary judgment.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED, and DECREED that Escobedo's motion for summary judgment (ECF No. 18) be, and the same hereby is, DENIED.

DATED April 20, 2017.
